FACTS RELATING TO PLAINTIFF

6. On May 28, 2007, Ms. Flowers executed a retail installment contract for a used 2005 Mitsubishi Galant.

7. Aaron Avant who identified himself as the finance manager of Toyota Scion informed Ms. Flowers that defendant would be able to obtain financing for her.

8. The executed retail installment contract provided that Drive Financial Services would provide financing for the 2005 Mitsubishi Galant.

9. As part of the financing application, Ms. Flowers provided Mr. Avant and Toyota Scion with her paycheck stub.

10. Drive Financial subsequently contacted Ms. Flowers' employer requesting verification of her income.

11. Subsequently on July 12, 2007, plaintiff was called into the Human Resource Department of her employer.

12. Ms. Flowers' employer received documentation from Drive Financial showing a forged pay stub showing an exaggerated income of $64,000.00.

13. Ms. Flowers advised her employer that she submitted to the Dealer a copy of the same pay stub provided to her and that she had not forged that document.

14. Ms. Flowers was then placed on unpaid administrative leave and received written notice of her predisciplinary meeting, which states in part that she violated the Code of Conduct and that "Honesty and integrity required to work with people with disabilities. Falsifying documentation is unacceptable and will not be tolerated."

15. On July 16, 2007, Ms. Flowers contacted Drive Financial and informed it that her pay stub was altered by the dealership.

16. Also on July 16, 2007, plaintiff filed a police report as to the forged pay stub.

17. Drive Financial subsequently canceled the automobile financing, but failed to send an ECOA notice as to the cancelled financing.

18. The exact identity of the person at defendant who forged the documents is in the exclusive control of defendant. On information and belief, plaintiff believes that Aaron Avant forged the finance documents as he was given exclusive control of plaintiff's documents and he promised that he would obtain financing with Drive Financial.

19. Subsequently, Michelle Wysogeele from Toyota Scion contacted plaintiff to sign new documents to resolve the situation.

20. Upon arriving at the dealership, Michelle Wysogeele insisted that plaintiff sign a new contract and would not let her leave with the vehicle until she did.

21. Ms. Flowers then attempted to return her vehicle to the dealership, but Toyota Scion would not return her entire down payment as required by the Consumer Fraud Act.

22. Plaintiff called the police who instructed the dealership give plaintiff the car back so she could return home.

23. Subsequently, the dealership agreed to take back the vehicle, but it then attempted to deduct $350 from the down payment since it asserted that plaintiff left with the vehicle and it had to pay for insurance.

24. Ms. Flowers then retained counsel, but defendant still refused to refund the entire down payment as memorialized by the letter from Ms. Wysogeele.

25. Eventually, defendant agreed to return the entire down payment.

26. As a result of the forgery by the dealership, plaintiff was under the suspicion of forgery, her reputation was damaged, she was put on administrative leave from work, she suffered extreme emotional distress and fear that she would lose her job.

27. The actions complained of herein are the acts of employees of defendant within the scope of their employment at Toyota Scion. As such, Toyota Scion is liable for the actions of its employees and managers.
